- 1 (a) Saratu, aged 40, is unemployed and living in York. She makes money by stealing mobile phones from tourists. Saratu watches for tourists who are using their phones. She approaches an elderly female tourist from behind and knocks her off balance. As the tourist is regaining her balance, Saratu steals her phone. Saratu is arrested, pleads guilty and is subsequently convicted of robbery.

Explain how the Sentencing Council guidelines will apply to Saratu. [10]

- (b) Yasmin, aged 25, is a regular customer at a local hair salon. One day, whilst having her hair cut, she sees the owner placing cash in a box under the counter. That night, Yasmin breaks in wearing a mask and carrying a hockey stick. Yasmin finds the box and is putting the cash into a bag when the salon owner, who was asleep upstairs, suddenly appears. Yasmin knocks the owner out with the hockey stick and escapes with £2000. Yasmin is arrested, pleads not guilty, but is subsequently convicted of robbery.

Explain how the Sentencing Council guidelines will apply to Yasmin. [10]

- (c) Shane, aged 38, and his 17 year old son, Gary, are walking past a shop and they see the elderly owner alone inside. Shane tells Gary to wait outside and to shout if anyone comes along. Shane enters the shop and threatens the owner with a knife. As the owner hands over £500 Gary shouts that the police are coming.

Shane and Gary are arrested at the scene. They plead not guilty but are later convicted of robbery. At the trial, Gary says he has never been in trouble before, had no idea what was going to happen and is very sorry.

Explain how the Sentencing Council guidelines will apply to Gary. [10]

- (d) Describe the sentences given to adult offenders and critically analyse the aims behind those sentences. [20]

R v Hasan [2005]

The elements of the defence of duress by threats are:

- A specified crime;
- An immediate threat;
- A threat of death or serious injury;
- A threat of violence to the defendant or a person for whom he has responsibility;
- A threat so great as to overbear the ordinary powers of human resistance.

R v Hudson & Taylor [1971]

H and T, aged 17 and 19, witnessed a fight in a pub. They were called to give evidence against one of those involved and had been threatened several times before the trial with violence if they gave evidence against the defendant. On the day of the trial the person making the threats was in the public gallery and stared menacingly at the appellants. The appellants lied in court and were later charged with perjury. The trial judge held that the defence of duress was not open to the jury – the threat was not of immediate violence as the threat was made in a court room and thus could not be carried out immediately. The jury convicted so H and T appealed. The appeal was allowed and the convictions were quashed.

R v Graham [1982]

1. The defendant must have a reasonable belief in the circumstances;
2. This belief must have led the defendant to have a good cause to fear death or serious injury would result if he did not comply; and
3. A sober person of reasonable firmness, sharing the characteristics of the defendant, might have acted as the defendant did.

R v Howe & Bannister [1987]

Howe & Bailey both aged 19 and Bannister aged 20, were acting under orders of Murray aged 35. The charges related to two murders and one conspiracy to murder. It was held that the defence of duress was not available for murder and the obiter dicta stated that the defence should not be available to one who attempts murder.

R v Cole [1994]

C borrowed some money from D, a money lender charging a very high rate of interest. D threatened C and his girlfriend with serious violence unless he repaid the money. C robbed several building societies in order to repay the money. He raised the defence of duress. The defence was unsuccessful and C's conviction was upheld. There was not a sufficient connection between the threat and the crime. D did not tell C to commit a crime to repay the money.
