October/November 2016

MARK SCHEME

Maximum Mark: 60

Published

This mark scheme is published as an aid to teachers and candidates, to indicate the requirements of the examination. It shows the basis on which Examiners were instructed to award marks. It does not indicate the details of the discussions that took place at an Examiners' meeting before marking began, which would have considered the acceptability of alternative answers.

Mark schemes should be read in conjunction with the question paper and the Principal Examiner Report for Teachers.

Cambridge will not enter into discussions about these mark schemes.

Cambridge is publishing the mark schemes for the October/November 2016 series for most Cambridge IGCSE[®], Cambridge International A and AS Level components and some Cambridge O Level components.

Content
Advantages
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Web-based market research is likely to be quicker than other forms of research which is important because ES needs a speedy response to the falling revenue • Web-based market research is likely to be cheaper (or free) than other forms of research which is important because ES is a small business • Web-based market research may be more up-to date than other forms of secondary market research, particularly important because this is a technologically changing marketplace • Web-based may be more appropriate because it is a web-based product that ES is considering Disadvantages
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Web-based market research may not have the validity of other forms of market research • Unlike primary (or paid for) market research, web-based may not be specific to what ES needs to know • Is this information sufficient to base such an important business decision upon, should Amaya back it up with other secondary, or some primary research?

	Content
	Purchasing economies
	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> YP obviously hold a lot of stock and it is reasonable to suggest that they benefit from bulk buying components leading to lower unit costs but may lead to holding obsolete stock.
	Technical economies
	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> YP is large enough to benefit from a capital intensive, flow production line (and CAM) so that they can produce at a lower unit cost compared to a business that cannot justify a flow production line YP can afford technology to implement mass customisation leading to more variation in products and therefore a wider product range to sell to retailers.
	Financial economies
	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> No evidence in case, but it can be assumed that YP may gain some financial economies of scale if they require finance for the new production line. More chance of gaining the finance for this and perhaps a lower interest rate therefore lower costs.
	Marketing economies

Question		Mark
	Content: Advantages <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • New markets could lead to increased sales and increased profits for YP • The international retailer could allow YP to spread the risk of their current operations. The business may be less susceptible to changes in the domestic market and domestic competitors • May lead to increasing economies of scale lowering unit costs • International retailer is willing to make regular purchases – security of revenue. • Opportunity for future growth. Disadvantages <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • YP would have to invest in a new production line which may mean a large capital injection and/or new sources of finance • There may be different legal requirements and standards for phones in international markets – YP may have to change their production methods and their products to be successful in these markets – would the retailer bear some responsibility for this? • Marketing in international markets may be difficult due to social, cultural and communication barriers – YP is in an industrial market so any marketing must be in this context. Although retailer is likely to bear responsibility for this. • YP would be more susceptible to worldwide economic changes. • Faye has no experience of international marketing or dealing with international retailers – will YP have to hire a new international Marketing Manager or face the costs of training Faye.
