Introduction

The main aim of this booklet is to exemplify standards for those teaching Cambridge International AS and A Level Literature in English (9695), and to show how different levels of candidates' performance relate to the subject's curriculum and assessment objectives.

In this booklet candidate responses have been chosen to exemplify a range of answers. Each response is accompanied by a brief commentary explaining the strengths and weaknesses of the answers.

For ease of reference the following format for each component has been adopted:

Each question is followed by an extract of the mark scheme used by examiners. This, in turn, is followed by examples of marked candidate responses, each with an examiner comment on performance. Comments are given to indicate where and why marks were awarded, and how additional marks could have been obtained. In this way, it is possible to understand what candidates have done to gain their marks and what they still have to do to improve their marks.

Past papers, Examiner Reports and other teacher support materials are available on Teacher Support at https://teachers.cie.org.uk

There are some changes to the format of mark schemes for examinations from 2016. Bands have been changed to Levels and level descriptors have been inverted so that the highest level is Level 6 and the lowest level is Level 1. New specimen mark schemes for examinations from 2016 are available on https://teachers.cie.org.uk

Mark scheme, all questions

Using the mark bands

Place the answer in a band first. Look for the 'best fit' of the answer into a band. An answer needs to show evidence of most but not necessarily ALL of the qualities described in a band, in order to be placed in that band. Then award a mark for the relative position of the answer within the band. Candidates may address the question in many different ways. Do not expect any particular focus or approach and do not penalise answers for leaving out a particular focus.

Reward what is there, showing what you are rewarding, in your comments.

Consider all strands and weigh up the performance as a whole in placing the answer in a band, then show that you have done so in the summative comment, e.g.

Sound K of texts, some evidence of U but mostly narrative, occasional evidence of P, mainly clear C.

Assessment Objectives:

- Ability to respond to texts in the three main forms (Prose, Poetry and Drama) of different types and from different cultures;
- Understanding of the ways in which writers' choices of form, structure and language shape meanings;
- Ability to produce informed independent opinions and judgements on literary texts;
- Ability to communicate clearly the knowledge, understanding and insight appropriate to literary study.

Each answer is marked out of 25, in accordance with the General Marking Criteria below.

Each band is divided into strands corresponding to the Assessment Objectives – Knowledge, Understanding, Personal Response, Communication.

Paper 5 – Shakespeare and other pre-20th Century Texts

Band 6 0-5

- K Evidence of some general knowledge of the text which may be narrative based and may contain errors, rarely relevant to the question and with little or no relevant quotation or selection from the text
- U There may be little or no evidence of understanding of form, structure and language, with some appropriate points made in response to the question. These will be limited and tend to be restricted to plot and characters the latter treated very much as 'real' people.
- P There may be some signs of personal response, not developed into an argument and not fully supported from the text.
- C Communication will be insecure. Expression may be weak with some breakdown in communication. Structure may be lacking: answers are likely to be partial, undeveloped, narrative commentary in approach; with the assertion of simple points rather than progressive lines of argument.
- O Others' opinions may be referred to in passing.

Answers to passage-based questions are likely to be seriously unbalanced, with an emphasis on narrative or paraphrase. Passages are likely to have been only partially understood and tentatively located contextually, with little coherent sense of the relationship between textual part and whole. There will be little or no mention or consideration of the literary features of the passage.

Band 5 6 – 9 Work of a basic standard

- K Evidence of some limited ability to use knowledge of the text to address the question, with occasional use of supporting references or quotation.
- U Evidence of some limited understanding of ways in which writers' choices of structure, form and language shape meanings.
- P Evidence of some personal response to the text but not fully supported.
- C Expression will be basically clear. There may be the occasional confused passage of writing. However, there will be no sustained loss of communication. There may be a simple structure to the answer with some evidence of an argument, which may lack coherence, with some repetition, assertion and relapse into narrative summary/paraphrase. There may be a tendency to drift from relevant discussion into material of tangential significance.
- O Mentions other opinions, perhaps those expressed in the question, and makes some attempt to consider different views of a text.

In answers to passage-based questions there will be some evidence of understanding of how part relates to whole. Treatment of the given extracts may well be sketchy or overlong and undiscriminating. Comment on the wider textual issues is likely to be general. There may be a lack of balance between passage and whole text. There will be some limited consideration of the literary features of the text.

Band 4 10 – 13 Solid work

- K Evidence of some ability to use relevant knowledge of the text to address the question.
- U Evidence of clear understanding of some ways in which writers' choices of structure, form and language shape meanings, which may be partial and restricted to the more obvious aspects of the text.
- P Evidence of personal response to the text, with the beginnings of a personal view or interpretation, relevant to the question and supported from the text.
- C Expression will be mostly clear and appropriate with a clear, simple structure to the answer. Argument will be basically coherent, and assertive in tone. There is likely to be some reliance on paraphrase and narrative summary. Articulates simple ideas with clarity but there may be some imprecision and clumsiness of expression in dealing with more complex concepts. There may be occasional obscurity in the presentation of ideas and responses.
- O Considers other opinions, perhaps those expressed in the question, weighs up different views of a text.

In answers to passage-based questions, work may be lacking in balance of approach, with over-concentration on the given extracts and little attempt to explore the broader textual issues. Conversely some answers may be in effect general essays, with insufficient treatment of the passages. There may be evidence of limited ability to negotiate between parts of a text and its whole. There will be some consideration of the literary features of the text with analysis of the features mentioned likely to be partial or restricted.

Band 3 14 – 17 Competent work

- K Evidence of competence in selecting relevant knowledge of the text to address with some pertinent use of quotation and direct references.
- U Evidence of sound understanding of some aspects of ways in which writers' choices of structure, form and language shape meanings, with some analysis and appreciation of literary methods, effects, and contexts.
- P Evidence of personal response relevant to the question, supported from the text.
- C Expression will be clear and generally accurate. Structure will be sound material coherently organised with occasional insights. Candidates will express intelligent, straightforward ideas clearly, though there may be occasional loss of fluency with points not always strongly connected.
- O Considers other opinions, weighs up different views with support from the text.

In answers to passage-based questions, work will cover both the passage and its relation to the whole text, and there will be some sense of a relationship between the text as a whole and its constituent parts. There will be competent appreciation of the effects of the literary features of the text and the analysis is supported by relevant examples from the passage.

Paper 5 – Shakespeare and other pre-20th Century Texts

Band 2 18 – 21 Proficient work

- K Evidence of proficiency in selecting relevant knowledge to address the question with precise and integrated direct references to the text and supporting quotation. There may be evidence of awareness of the contexts in which the literary works studied were written and understood.
- U Evidence of intelligent understanding of ways in which writers' choices of structure, form and language shape meanings, with analysis and appreciation of literary methods, effects and contexts.
- P Evidence of personal response to the texts, relevant to the question, supported from the text, some originality of thought, straightforward and vigorously articulated, perhaps, rather than penetrating and subtle.
- C Expression confident, with some complex ideas expressed with some fluency. Structure is sound. Literary arguments will be coherent, with progression of ideas through clearly linked paragraphs.
- O Considers varying views and argues a case with support from the text.

In answers to passage-based questions, work will show engagement with both the given extracts and the wider textual issues. There will be a confident relation of a part of the text to its whole. There will be a proficient appreciation of the effects of the literary features of the text supported by relevant examples from the passage and from the wider text where appropriate. There will be a good knowledge of the appropriate context of the extract or work.

Band 1 22 – 25 Very good work – do not reserve this band for the very best work you see but ensure you put scripts into this band which fulfil the requirements described below. There will always be some candidates who are at a standard over the top of the mark scheme.

- K Evidence of a very good ability to select relevant knowledge to address the question with effective use of references and quotation. There may be evidence of sensitive awareness of the contexts in which the literary works studied were written and understood.
- U Evidence of very good understanding of ways in which writers' choices of structure, form and language shape meanings with sustained analysis and sensitive appreciation of literary methods and effects and contexts, possibly including literary genres and conventions.
- P Personal response to texts will be perceptive, often freshly personal, fully supported with quotation, and may show originality in approach to and treatment of questions.
- C Candidates will express complex literary ideas and arguments with clarity and fluency. Answers will have a coherent structure, with logical progression and effectively linked paragraphs. Expression will be accomplished and appropriate.
- O Considers varying views, arguing a persuasive case, relevant to the question, with support from the text.

In answers to passage-based questions, work will sustain an appropriate balance between critical appreciation of given extracts, based on detailed critical analysis, and consideration of the broader textual issues raised by the questions, and relate part of a text to its whole and vice versa in a seamless argument. There will be a very good appreciation of the effects of the literary features of the text, with detailed analysis supported by relevant examples from the passage and the wider text, where appropriate. There will be a very good knowledge of the appropriate context of the extract or work.

The candidate argues a sophisticated case, focusing from the start on the key terms of the question: 'presentation' and 'meaning and effects'. The argument is set out in the introduction, focusing on relevant themes, which, in the candidate's view, this relationship contributes to. The main essay expands on these ideas in turn, considering 'family' and making some thoughtful points about the two girls' relationships with their fathers. This is developed into exploring the contrast between the two girls and their eventual husbands. the brothers Oliver and Orlando. These points are supported by relevant, brief textual references. The argument also considers 'transgression', offering a more unusual interpretation of the girls' relationship, but crucially that is developed into an exploration of Shakespeare's 'transgression' of other theatrical conventions, neatly embedding different opinions and interpretations of the relationship and how it is presented. There is secure knowledge of the text and partly the context, with secure understanding of how the writer's choices, such as the contrasts between the couples, create dramatic effects. This might have been developed further into other elements of the text, such as their links with Touchstone or through an analysis of their language and humour. The argument and personal response was relevantly and well developed and clearly structured. Intelligent ideas were put forward, considered thoughtfully and expressed clearly and effectively. Other views were more implicitly considered, though awareness of different interpretations was in evidence throughout the essay.

The introduction is generally relevant to the task and sets out a view of how this relationship links to a wider theme of the significance of the forest. The candidate shows good knowledge of the text by referring to the changes that take place in Celia and Rosalind's relationship between the court and the forest, though the development by referring to Orlando and the Duke is not fully integrated into either the argument or the task. The consideration of Celia's reaction to Rosalind's love for Orlando is interesting though lacking in sufficient support to be convincing. The relationship is seen as one way that the transforming effect of the forest is dramatised, with some useful linking to Orlando and Oliver, though the role of the girls in this respect is asserted rather than demonstrated by specific references to the text. The knowledge of the text is good though there is little awareness of the wider contexts shown. The understanding of the relationship between the girls and how that informs the audience response to some thematic elements is sound, though there is insufficient development of the analysis and too little sense of the construct to reach the next band. There is a relevant personal response, though it is at times asserted and only partly addresses the task. Expression is clear and there is a coherent structure with some sense of different interpretations, though again this is not developed enough to reach the higher assessment band.

There is a limited introduction through a brief summary of the relationship and some of the relevant narrative background. This tempts the candidate into a less well-focused summary of the events, leading to the flight to the forest and the disguises. There is some implicit interpretation through the summary but this is undeveloped and assertive. The candidate does however see the relationship in terms of the wider theme of 'love' in the play and how Shakespeare presents the girls as 'selfless', with some specific reference to the detail of the text. This enables the candidate to offer an opinion on the effect of this presentation on the audience: 'it is surprising..'. The development of this idea however is rather generalised and leads to some personal views that are not quite rooted in the detail of the text. The candidate overall has a basic knowledge of the text with some understanding of how the presentation of the two girls might be interpreted in different ways. There is a personal response, relevant to the task, though not supported by specific textual reference and, though the expression is clear, the essay is unstructured and drifts into more general assertions, with little obvious recognition of other possible views of the text.

		this turning point conveys the quick-mindedness
		and unainy of logo.
		The extract opens with, once again,
		logo being deemed on "honest fellow". This is a recurring piece of dramatic irony which emphasises logo's capability and omer characters' susceptibility to trusting him. Elsewhere, he is deemed "honest" by characters such as Othello, Cassia and Montano. The fact that Desdemona is now referring to him as honest demonstrates that She, too, was fallen victim to his monipulation. Her unfailing idealism in This sense is what determines her downware

lago's fabrication is Desdemona's line
"he hath left part of his grief with me!

this affected by Cassio's misfortune because of her capacity for empathy and naivery, but this could easily be percieved
as passion and love towards cassio.
However, this is not to say that
Othero is even affected Straight away.
Pernaps what is most painful about me tragedy is his decline from "valiant Otnello"

The purposeful introduction immediately explores the significance of the extract, keeping the focus of the question – 'methods and concerns' – in clear view. It offers a perceptive summary, which shows knowledge and understanding of the context and the situation, supported by apposite, brief quotation. The essay moves in a more or less linear way through the passage, focusing on characterisation and some of the key moments, often signalled by an exploration of the language and, crucially at this level of performance, the effects created by the writer's choices. Dramatic conventions and effects are also well explored and intelligently linked to different possible interpretations, which are further supported by reference to different critics. This leads to the shrewd summary that this passage is a turning point for each of the characters. Secure knowledge of the wider text and its meaning and some appropriate contexts is clearly evidenced. This platform enables the candidate to demonstrate very good understanding through sustained analysis of the language of the passage and its effects – Desdemona's use of 'suitor' for example. Personal response is sophisticated and indicates a grasp of multiple possible interpretations of character and situation, with reference to the wider text seamlessly integrated. The complex ideas are clearly and effectively expressed, with a clear, structured approach, focused on the terms of the task and pointed by thoughtful use of varying views from critics to underpin the ideas explored.

The candidate begins with a general contextualisation and introduction to the passage, showing awareness of the significance: 'setting up the main action'. The focus of the essay then turns to the characters, offering some interpretation on what this passage reveals about each of them in turn. This enables the candidate to discuss some elements of the style, mainly the language, though the analysis is not fully developed. There is some awareness of 'concerns' as revealed through character, though less focus on the detail of the methods. The candidate does present some personal response and interesting interpretation, a more unusual view of Emilia as 'two-faced', for example, or that Desdemona's use of the word 'honest' might be seen as comic. The general introduction to Othello, although not sufficiently rooted in the passage, does show secure knowledge of the wider text and the candidate gives an intelligent account of the situation between lago and Othello, showing understanding; lago's 'feigned ignorance' for example, and thereby the dramatic situation. The candidate appropriately sees this moment as a turning point in their relationship and explores well lago's ability to take advantage of the opportunity that Cassio gives him by 'stealing away'. The textual knowledge is sound throughout, though some relevant context - the cause for Cassio's plea to Desdemona for example – is missed, but there is a sensible balance between references to the passage and the wider text. Understanding is shown, particularly of character and character development, but there is insufficient analysis of the dramatic methods and the details of this passage to reach the next band. Different interpretations are acknowledged but again not fully developed into an argument, though the expression is clear and generally appropriate throughout the essay.

The candidate begins with a general and broadly accurate summary of the situation in the passage, though does not explore the context. However the candidate understands that this situation leads to the 'drama' of the play. The candidate then explores the characters, showing some awareness of different interpretations – Desdemona as 'flirtatious' for example – but not demonstrating that idea by reference to the passage or the wider text. The candidate does have a basic understanding of the situation between Cassio, Desdemona and Othello and is aware of the influence that lago exerts over Othello. The candidate considers the dramatic effects of Cassio's exit, with some personal response on how this might affect an audience, in this case a 'reader'. These opinions are not developed by reference to the detail of the passage or to specific moments in the wider text, so that the candidate understands lago's manipulation is asserted rather than demonstrated by precise reference to the passage. There is overall a basic knowledge of the text and characters and some awareness of the dramatic effects, though crucially little engagement with the language. The candidate does offer a personal response, asserted rather than demonstrated but relevant to the task. Expression is clear and generally appropriate with some weaknesses and there is a rudimentary structure to the discussion, with some incipient awareness of different views.

The candidate's introduction sets out how the quotation is to be explored with a clear focus on the 'presentation' of Elinor. Austen's methods of characterisation are kept at the centre of the discussion by the specific references and these methods are well explored throughout the essay. There is a well-focused introduction which recognises the 'typical' response to Elinor as the representative of 'sense'. This is then developed, by using the quotation given in the question, into a more complex view of her as also full of sensibility. This duality is explored by contrast with Marianne and through discussion of Elinor's marriage to Edward, and how that differs from both Marianne's and Willoughby's eventual situations. There is throughout secure evidence of selecting relevant knowledge, both of the text and relevant contexts, such as the gender issues Austen addresses in the novel. The understanding of the writer's choice, how for example the narrative voice becomes at times Elinor's voice and how that effects the reader's response to Lucy, is very good, though to achieve higher marks this might have been developed into a more sustained analysis of other elements such as language. The personal response is often perceptive and the views expressed on Elinor's sensibility, discriminating and fresh. Points are well argued and crucially at this level of performance well supported by reference to the text. The expression is clear and at times complex, with a well-developed structure to the argument and a coherent flow to the essay. The numerous references to critical opinions are relevant and used to underpin the candidate's own arguments effectively.

The candidate begins with a general introduction to Elinor, setting out the 'sense and sensibility' duality. suggested in the quotation in the question, though perhaps crucially the candidate does not address the terms of the task specifically. The candidate develops the response by offering different interpretations of Elinor's character: a personal one – 'too reserved and remote' – contrasted with a more general '21st Century view', well linked back to the text through the references to Marianne's view of her sister. The candidate does not specifically consider Austen's presentation, but in the discussion comparing Marianne and Elinor shows sound understanding of the novelist's methods. This develops into considering Elinor's role in the novel through her relationship with other characters such as Lucy, Edward and Colonel Brandon; thus again tacitly exploring the writer's methods. The candidate analyses the effects of the sisters' contrasting reactions to Mrs Jennings, showing secure textual knowledge. The question is then more directly referenced by the exploration of the change in Elinor at the end of the novel as she 'lets go of her facade' and marries Edward. Crucially the candidate has not shown how Austen alerts the reader to the facade in the early part of the text. There is a sound and detailed knowledge of the text and Elinor's role, though the interpretations tend to be asserted rather than demonstrated, so that the candidate's understanding of the methods is implicit rather than demonstrated by analysis of specific moments in the text. The candidate's expression is clear and appropriate and there is a clear structure to the essay, though the candidate does not develop the argument much beyond Elinor's character and role, so that the more thematic elements of the text are largely ignored.

The candidate begins with a general summary of the novel's focus on sense and sensibility, linking this to Marianne and Elinor, which leads the candidate to consider the terms of the question, offering a personal view that Austen does not always 'approve' of Elinor's thinking. The candidate attempts to underpin this with some contextual support, which is broadly relevant to the task, and comes back to the idea of 'liberty', seeing it in a more general way than perhaps the quotation suggests. Critical to the candidate's level of performance is the absence of specific textual references, so that the essay is assertive and undeveloped. There is a better focus on the text with the consideration of Elinor's contrasting views on Willoughby and Brandon, so that some knowledge is shown, but this is not developed further. The candidate repeats the idea that Elinor's thoughts are 'undesirable and negative' but does not support this view nor demonstrate where and how in the text it is revealed. The candidate does understand the basic sense and sensibility dichotomy and sees how Elinor develops throughout the text into revealing her sensibility, though again there is no specific textual reference to support this view. The candidate has a basic knowledge of the text and the main concerns, though limited awareness of methods, which limits the level of performance to low. There is some personal response and implicit awareness of different interpretations, but these are asserted rather than demonstrated. The candidate's expression is generally clear and there is a broad, rudimentary structure to the essay.

The candidate begins with a general introduction, though there is some focus on the task and this leads to a statement of the thematic concerns, showing the candidate's clear understanding of the text. The candidate has a very good understanding of the duality in the novel and exemplifies this through an exploration of Marianne's development, as a character and crucially as a symbol, underpinning this idea with well-selected critical comments and showing a grasp of the text as a construct. This leads the candidate into a consideration of the wider context and the argument is well developed by reference to the wider text— 'Marianne's sickness' — and by analysis of relevant parts of the passage. The candidate has a very good understanding of the literary context and conventions and is able to shape that into exploring the effects of Austen's presentation of Willoughby's marriage and state of mind. The overall knowledge of text and context is very good, with secure and sophisticated understanding of the literary conventions and to some extent Austen's methods. More developed analysis of some of the detail of the passage would have lifted the overall performance, though the development of the arguments is thoughtful and perceptive and at the Band 1 level. Expression is clear and effective and the essay is well structured and controlled, with some very good references to critical views.

The introduction includes a brief context to the passage and the candidate shows understanding of the narrative methods almost immediately, with some understanding of the effects. The candidate focuses on Marianne's development as a character, with some consideration of different interpretations, though these are not exemplified in detail. There is also some understanding of the style, such as satire and comedy, though these points are not developed through more detailed analysis. The candidate's discussion of Eliza, Willoughby and Brandon demonstrates knowledge of the wider text, relevantly selected, and this leads to a more detailed interpretation of different responses to Marianne's marriage to Brandon, supported by some detail from the passage and by critical views. The candidate's knowledge of the text is secure, though there is limited reference to wider contexts. There is sound understanding of character and at times of narrative methods, though the ideas expressed in the introduction are not developed further. The candidate offers a well-considered personal response, though this is not supported by detailed analysis of the passage and there is a clear awareness of different views, often supported by critical references. The expression is clear and generally effective and there is evidence of a clear structure to the essay.

The candidate begins with a general summary of the passage by way of introduction, with a brief context given. There is some consideration of style – Austen's language and use of repetition for example – but this is not linked to an interpretation and is therefore rather general in its conclusions. The candidate does explore some methods – how Marianne's plans are contrasted with her eventual marriage to Brandon, for example – and links this discussion to the wider concerns of sense and sensibility. This though is not developed beyond a basic level and the candidate then summarises the passage on Marianne and Brandon and also on Willoughby's marriage, rather than analysing the detail or interpreting the ideas. The knowledge of the text is generally sound, though there is little awareness of contexts. The candidate has a limited understanding of methods but without consideration of some of the detail of the passage, this remains at the Band 5 level of performance. The personal response is partly supported by the text, but this lapses into summary and paraphrase rather than interpretation and analysis. The expression is clear and there is a basic structure to the essay, though the lack of development of the response limits the overall standard to Band 5.
