Fig. 3 for Question 4*The Valley of Kings

The west bank of Luxor, Egypt, had been the site of royal burials since around 2100 BC. The Valley of the Kings has 63 magnificent royal tombs.

The tombs have suffered greatly from treasure hunters, floods and, in recent years, from mass tourism: carbon dioxide and humidity produced by the sweat left by each visitor have affected the reliefs and the pigments of the wall paintings. The Department of Antiquities has installed dehumidifiers and glass screens in the worst-affected tombs, and introduced a rotation system for opening tombs to the public while restoring others. It is possible to buy an entry ticket which gains access to three tombs. For an additional fee, a ticket can be bought to see the tombs of Ay, Tutankhamun and Ramses VI.

The road into the Valley of the Kings is a gradual, dry, hot climb, so be prepared, especially if you are riding a bicycle. Be prepared for the tourist bazaar, which sells soft drinks, ice creams, snacks and souvenirs. The air-conditioned visitors' centre has a good model of the Valley, a movie about the discovery of the tomb of Tutankhamun, and toilets. For a fee, a tuf-tuf (a little electrical train) takes visitors between the visitors' centre and the tombs.
