Bagels & Baguettes (BB)

BB is a private limited company which operates 3 sandwich shops. It sells ready-made and made-to-order sandwiches. BB has two types of customer - business customers and customers who visit its shops. BB earns 40% of its revenue from business customers. They place bulk orders each day and these orders are delivered by BB. Some of the customers who visit BB's shops give their orders and receive their sandwiches without leaving their cars. This is called a drive-through service. The drive-through service helps to differentiate BB from its competitors.

The lease on one shop has finished. BB's Managing Director, Shivani, has identified two locations for a replacement shop. Details of these locations are shown in Appendix 2.

BB has high labour turnover. The shop managers know that the employees have low motivation. The shop employees are paid the legal minimum wage. They do the same job every day. Shop employees either make the sandwiches or serve shop customers and drive-through customers. Shivani gives shop managers general business objectives and allows them to make all the decisions for the shop they are responsible for. Sometimes this leads to different marketing decisions when responding to changes in customer needs.

Shop managers feel overworked and often work much longer hours than stated in their employment contract. There is limited opportunity for promotion in the organisational structure, as shown in Appendix 1. The shop managers have suggested that experienced shop employees could be appointed as deputy managers.

BB's shops are located in busy cities in country X. Shivani wants to expand the business in addition to the replacement shop. She is considering two options for BB's growth.

Option 1: Open a new BB shop.

Option 2: Take over a competitor's shop. The competitor's shop does not currently provide a drive-through service.

Shivani is planning to finance the growth of the business from retained profit and a long-term bank loan. Some months the company has cash-flow problems. Business customers pay at the end of each month but BB pays its suppliers in cash when food ingredients are delivered.
