Exercise 1

Read the article about a family that decided to travel around the world, and then answer the following questions.

Round-the-world family!

Matt and Linda Schultz, and their two children, Amy, six, and Ben, eight, have been away from home for the past 21 months. Their intention was to spend a year travelling around the world, though now they can't imagine returning to their previous life. 'When are we going back? I'd say it could be in six months, or in 60 years!' explained Linda. 'For anyone thinking of travelling around the world, my first tip would be not to plan too far ahead. Who knows where we'll be next year!'

The Schultz family have met many other travelling families since setting off. Some travel for work – for example, if one parent is a travel journalist. Others, like Matt and Linda, had simply wanted to spend more time together as a family. I asked them if they'd needed to escape from the stress of living in a big city. 'I like cities,' Matt answered. 'It's just that we thought we'd like to experience different cultures.' And they certainly have! After spending three months driving throughout the United States, the family explored Mexico and Guatemala, then flew to Costa Rica. From Colombia, which was their next stop, they travelled overland to Chile, before flying to New Zealand. They're soon heading to Thailand from their current location in Malaysia. But their favourite country so far has been Sri Lanka, and they're all keen to return there at some point. If all that travelling sounds exhausting, Matt admits that sometimes it is. 'A friend told us to spend two weeks in one place every couple of months. It's a good suggestion – otherwise it can be pretty tiring travelling all the time.'

One question they frequently get asked is how they can afford this long trip. 'We get some income by renting out our house. We've got some savings too, though we haven't had to use those. We actually get almost enough to live on from our travel blog. Linda started that before we left home.' Matt added that he's a website developer, and is planning to set up an online business soon. Another common question relates to the children's education. 'I've always been interested in 'home-schooling' – teaching children at home rather than in a classroom,' said Matt. 'But this trip is what's known as an 'edventure' – a combination of education and adventure. The children are always asking questions about everything, and they're seeing things with their own eyes that otherwise they'd only see in books. We do some traditional homework with them as well, like maths and spelling, though I'd say the most important thing is for the children to write a diary. Amy and Ben spend nearly an hour a day on theirs.' Linda added that if the children say they want to go to a traditional school, they'll all return home. 'But they're having a fantastic time right now, so I don't think it'll be soon!'

I ask Matt and Linda if they worry about the children forgetting where they come from. 'We tell them stories about home every night,' said Linda. 'That was my dad's idea, and I'd recommend it to any other family that's travelling. I'd also say to put up a few photos of home wherever you stay.' That leads us to talk about the many different places they have stayed in. 'We all love camping, though the houseboat we rented in Mexico gets the most votes so far,' Matt said.

And then it was time for the interview to end, leaving me dreaming about all the places around the world I'd like to see – if only I had the time.

Exercise 2

Read the article about four people (A–D) who won different competitions. Then answer Question 9 (a)–(j).

First prize!

A Pavel Barsok

I've always enjoyed creative writing, so when my teacher told me about a short-story competition, I didn't need much persuading to enter. That evening, I looked online for more information about it. I expected entering to be a straightforward procedure. The last time I'd done a similar competition, I just had to give my personal details then upload my finished story. This time it was totally different – I had to get two people to complete references for me by hand, send them in, then wait for my entry number before downloading and completing a form. The competition was really popular, so I didn't think the likelihood of me winning would be all that high. Nevertheless, I sent in my story then more or less forgot about it. I was away, without access to the internet, when the results were published online. So I was amazed when my classmate sent me a text telling me that I'd got first prize!

B Ruth Kapambwe

Last year, I took part in a national cookery competition. I'd tried to get a place on it the year before, but had been too late with my application. There were 20 of us to begin with, and what struck me was how confident the other competitors all seemed to be. It made me even more determined to do my best. There were several rounds, and we had to cook something different each time. By the final round, there were five of us left, and we'd got to know each other fairly well. Mostly we tended to keep our ideas to ourselves, but I didn't see anything wrong with making the occasional helpful suggestion when I saw what someone else was doing. In the final round, we had to bake some special bread so I made a loaf which had herbs in it. I was inspired by a magazine article I'd read by a cookery writer not long before. The judges obviously liked it because they awarded me first prize!

C Anil Patel

Last year, I took a course in fashion design and at the end of it, I entered the Young Fashion Designer of the Year competition. Although that time I didn't get past the first round, it didn't put me off trying again. I felt much better prepared this year, and took the previous year's judges' comments into account when working on my entry. I was really confident about the designs I sent in, and was selected as one of seven finalists to take part in a show where the winner would be chosen. I had to present my designs to the audience and get three friends to model them for me. I was so nervous – I'm not sure I could have done it if they hadn't been with me. When my name was announced, I was thrilled! I chose a week-long work placement as my prize, which I'm starting next month. I could have had cash instead, but I thought the experience would be far more valuable.

D Alejandra Castilla

I'm really into photography and have entered several competitions in the past. When my friend Maria told me about this local wildlife photography competition, I was busy at college, so my initial reaction was not to bother entering. However, she was keen to take part, and eventually convinced me as well. We both took various photos and spent some time looking at each other's. Maria had three really good ones, but I couldn't say which I preferred. I was also unsure which of mine to submit. Maria said she liked one I'd taken of some birds eating berries in a tree, but in the end I chose one of a fox in my garden instead. And luckily it received first prize! The finalists' photos were printed in a calendar, which looked great, and I got a place on a one-day photography course. It sounded interesting but in fact was aimed more at beginners, so I didn't actually gain anything from it.

9 For each question, write the correct letter A, B, C or D on the line.

Which person ...

- (a) had taken part in the same competition before? [1]
- (b) heard that they had won from a friend? [1]
- (c) got their winning idea from another person? [1]
- (d) lacked confidence in their chance of winning? [1]
- (e) was unimpressed with the prize they received? [1]
- (f) needed to make a decision about their prize? [1]
- (g) had to be persuaded to enter the competition? [1]
- (h) was surprised how complicated the application process was? [1]
- (i) suggested that they couldn't have won without support from others? [1]
- (j) gave some advice to another competitor? [1]

Exercise 3

Read the article about a woman who has flown on top of, rather than inside, a plane, and then complete the notes.

Betty Bromage, 89-year-old wing-walker

Betty Bromage was in her 80s and had recently moved into a retirement home in the south west of England. However, she still wanted to have some excitement in her life. For a while, she considered taking up an extreme sport such as skydiving or abseiling. When she came up with the idea of wing-walking, which means standing on the wings of a vintage plane while it's flying in the air, she decided there was no reason why she shouldn't do it straight away. While many other extreme sports require you to do some training to prepare, this wasn't so with wing-walking. She did her first wing-walk when she was 87, and has since done two more, each time to celebrate her birthday.

Before doing her first wing-walk, Betty had to get a doctor's certificate to prove she was fit enough. 'The doctor asked me what I thought being old meant. I said that I'd feel old if I couldn't get up from a chair, or when I needed help getting out of bed, but not until then.' Although the doctor later admitted wondering if he'd done the right thing, he signed the certificate. He was impressed by her desire to do something that would surprise her friends. And wing-walking certainly did that! When she landed after her initial wing-walk, the first thing Betty said to the pilot was 'Can I go back up again now?' She said it felt amazing to be up there with the wind in her face, travelling at speeds of 140 miles per hour. 'The strength of the wind blew my cheeks in and out, and it felt very cold, but I'd put lots of layers of clothes on to keep warm.' She also decided to wear a neck support, although this wasn't an actual requirement.

Betty has used her wing-walks to raise money for a local charity. She has received lots of publicity, in local as well as national newspapers, although this was never one of her aims. After her initial wing-walk, she said that the hardest thing about it was having to climb up onto the wing of the plane. Once in position, she just had to let the pilot strap her securely in place, before they took off.

Betty has two young grandsons. 'When I first told one of them that I was going to try wing-walking, he said: "Well, if that's what you really want to do...". He didn't tell me not to do it, but I think that's what he meant. My other grandson said to his mother: "Don't encourage her, Mum." I feel I have to inspire the younger generation how to live! There's no doubt that she has achieved this, as she is recognised as the world's oldest female wing-walker. In fact, one of the reasons she decided to do a second walk was to break her own record. When she was told that the world's oldest wing-walker is a 95-year-old man, Betty's reaction was: 'Well, I'll just have to carry on until I'm 96, won't I!'

You are going to give a talk about Betty Bromage to your class at school. Prepare some notes to use as the basis for your talk.

Exercise 4

12 Read the article about an organisation called The Seabin Project.

Write a summary about what The Seabin Project hopes to achieve in the future.

Your summary should be about 100 words long (and no more than 120 words long). You should use your own words as far as possible.

You will receive up to 8 marks for the content of your summary, and up to 8 marks for the style and accuracy of your language.

The Seabin Project

The Seabin Project was set up by two keen surfers, Andrew Turton and Pete Ceglinski, who had one simple mission: to get rid of pollution in the world's oceans. They wondered if they could find a solution by adapting the simple concept of the rubbish bins we use every day on land. After securing enough funding, they created a team to research the idea, and together they came up with what they called the Seabin. It was then just a case of working hard to get sufficient financial support to allow production to begin. In 2017, the first Seabin was installed in Finland, and since then many have been put in place around the world. One of the team's goals is to make Seabins available in the maximum number of locations.

A Seabin is a floating rubbish bin that is placed in the water at marinas, docks, yacht clubs and commercial ports. It moves up and down with the tide, collecting any floating rubbish. It needs to be carefully positioned so that the wind and the movement of the water push rubbish directly towards it. Currently, a Seabin can be installed anywhere the water is relatively calm and electricity is available to power the pump. However, the team is optimistic that they will find a way to install Seabins in the open ocean before long.

Water is pumped into the Seabin from the surface, and then flows through a catch bag before being pumped back into the sea. Any rubbish is trapped inside the catch bag, which can hold up to 20 kilograms. The bag needs to be checked regularly and emptied when necessary. The rubbish they collect also serves a scientific purpose: the Seabin Project team is analysing what is collected in the Seabins with a view to gaining a clearer understanding of the state of our oceans. Then, finally, the rubbish can be disposed of properly.

The Seabin Project is about far more than just the product. In fact, the team would be happy if there was no longer any need for Seabins. They want to educate people to get rid of rubbish properly, and to do this they are investing in programmes in schools and businesses. In particular, their vision is to change people's attitudes towards plastic. Plastic in the oceans is one of the world's greatest environmental problems, and even though they have calculated that in one year, one Seabin can collect approximately 90 000 plastic bags, 35 700 disposable plastic cups, 16 500 plastic bottles, plus a lot more rubbish, Seabins alone will not clean up the oceans. A greater emphasis on recycling around the world is therefore something the Seabin Project would like to see.

At the same time, the project's scientists are working hard to improve the Seabin itself. To do this, they need to attract more funding to support their work. As this is such an important cause, and they are able to demonstrate how effective their product is, they remain optimistic.

A series of horizontal dotted lines for writing.

Exercise 5

- 13 Your friend is going on a school trip to another country and has never been away from home before. You went on the same school trip last year.

Write an email to your friend about the school trip.

In your email, you should:

- tell your friend about the place you visited
- give some advice about what to take
- say what you enjoyed about being away from home.

The pictures above may give you some ideas, and you can also use some ideas of your own.

Your email should be between 150 and 200 words long.

You will receive up to 8 marks for the content of your email, and up to 8 marks for the language used.

Exercise 6

14 In class, you have been discussing whether young children should have a mobile phone.

Here are two comments from your classmates:

Young children will just lose a phone!

They can easily contact their parents.

Write an article for your teacher, giving your views.

The comments above may give you some ideas, and you can also use some ideas of your own.

Your article should be between 150 and 200 words long.

You will receive up to 8 marks for the content of your article, and up to 8 marks for the language used.
