Exercise 1

You will hear eight short recordings. For each question, choose the correct answer, A, B, C or D, and put a tick (✓) in the appropriate box.

You will hear each recording twice.

R1 Question 1

What did the girl like most in the park?

PAUSE 00'03"

F: female, 15–16 years old, UK accent

F * Hi Jane! Mum and I had a nice walk in the park yesterday. There were loads of flowers, and some trees were covered in flowers too. And the gardens were full of roses, which smelt nice. It all looked very tidy. For me, that was part of the problem, though, as I really prefer wild flowers that just appear anywhere and are left for the bees, like the ones growing in an area of long grass there. Those were the prettiest, I think, and even nicer than the huge flowers growing at the park entrance! **

R1 Question 2

What did the boy spend most time looking at during his museum trip yesterday?

PAUSE 00'03"

F: female, 30 years old,

M: male, 15 – 16 years old

F * How was your museum trip yesterday, Robbie?

M Great thanks, Mrs Harris. I've been there several times, and always go first to the coin collections, then have no time to see anything else. So this time I planned my visit, and headed for the displays of historical costumes. I took loads of photos for the art project we're doing.

F Good.

M I had intended to photograph some jewellery as well, but I was too busy! I did spot a sculpture gallery there, too, though, so I'm going back again soon to draw some of them.

F Well done! **

R1 Question 3

What did both friends particularly enjoy at the restaurant?

PAUSE 00'03"

F: female, early twenties, light US accent

M: male, early twenties, light US accent

- F * What did you think of the meal? The soup was quite nice – unusual ...
- M And the pizzas were OK – not much on top of them, though.
- F Oh, I don't know ... anyway, I was more impressed by the salad, I think – I'd never tried some of the ingredients before!
- M It certainly was very tasty! I began to wish we hadn't ordered that soup at the beginning, though – then I would've had enough room for dessert. That chocolate cake you had looked delicious.
- F Oh, you didn't miss much – it looked better than it tasted! **

R1 Question 4

How did the boy get to college this morning?

PAUSE 00'03"

F: female, thirties, UK accent

M: male, 18–19 years old, UK accent;

- F * Why were you late this morning?
- M Sorry, Mrs Jones - I had a terrible time getting to college. The main road into town was closed for some reason, so buses weren't picking up passengers. And by the time I'd realised what was happening, it was too late to catch a train. So I had to walk – quite a long way. My brother came past and offered me a lift on his motorbike – I turned him down, but half an hour later when I still hadn't got here, I really wished I'd accepted. **

R1 Question 5

Which new sport would the girl like to do?

PAUSE 00'03"

M: male, 16–17 years old

F: female, 16–17 years old, light Australian accent

- M * Which sports clubs are you signing up for at school this year? I know the football club's got spaces.
- F Not a bad idea. It'd be a chance to try something completely different. I mean, I might not be any good – but I'll give it a go!
- M Why not! Or there's volleyball?
- F I've always been useless at that, so I'll probably avoid it. But I'm a pretty good basketball player ... so that's a possibility.
- M Right! Anyway, come on – I'll challenge you to a game of table tennis.
- F OK – and I bet I win!
- M You always do! **

R1 Question 6

What job is the girl considering doing in the future?

PAUSE 00'03"

M: male, thirties, UK accent

F: female, 16–17 years old, UK accent

- M * Have you thought what you'd like to do when you leave school, Anna? You're good at biology, so medicine, maybe? And you were thinking of becoming a vet at one stage.
- F Mm ... maybe ... I'm not sure I'd be suited to it, Mr Scott. And my dad's a doctor – he works such long hours! I'd prefer to work on my own – so maybe a scientist, discovering new medicines to help doctors.
- M And dentists, too – now, that's a career worth thinking about.
- F You're right, though perhaps not for me. But thanks anyway, Mr Scott! **

R1 Question 7

Which activity will the girl help with in the park?

PAUSE 00'03"

M: male, 16–17 years old, UK accent

F: female, 16–17 years old, UK accent

M * Are you volunteering for any of the activities in the park this weekend?

F Yeah – are you? There are several – like tree planting in the morning, but I've got a class then, so I'll probably go later and join in with building those little boxes our group leader was talking about.

M What, for the birds? They sound cool – better than painting the benches. I can't see how that's helping.

F Well, we want people to come and appreciate the park – and nice seats attract more people. And you've been busy picking up the rubbish so it looks lovely now! **

R1 Question 8

Where is the boy moving to?

PAUSE 00'03"

F: female, 16–17 years old, UK accent

M: male, 16–17 years old, UK accent

F * So the new place you're moving to – what's it like? Is it a flat?

M Well, we've always lived in flats, but this time Dad wanted somewhere quiet, and further from the city, so he's found a house. It's semi-detached – the house is joined to our neighbours' one.

F Right. But I thought you'd found a big house in the city? And your dad was talking about a cottage at one stage.

M Well, the one he found was too small for all of us – and that house was noisy. A country cottage would be lovely, though! **

R1 You will hear two friends talking about the photos they've taken in the countryside.

Now look at Questions 9 and 10.

PAUSE 00'15"

F: female, 18–19 years old

M: male, 18–19 years old

F * Do you want to see the bird photos I took when we were in the countryside?

M Sure!

F I mean, I don't have the latest model of camera – I've been using it for years – and it was raining, so I was pessimistic about finding any to take pictures of. As it turns out, though, there were so few people around that I got quite close to the birds, as they weren't disturbed.

M Well, these photos I took are OK but they could've been better. The sun was out so they're not really dark or anything, but there's just nothing unusual about them.

F But you've got different things in each of them – clouds, trees, water...

M Mm, but that wasn't what I was aiming for, really. **

M: male, mid twenties, UK accent, voicemail

M * Hi Janet. Sorry – I've got car problems again this morning. As you know it hasn't worked well for ages. Sometimes I haven't even been able to leave home in it. That didn't happen today, but then on the way to the office, I suddenly heard a bang in the engine. Anyway, I've just got to the office car park and called a mechanic. I'll come up to the office once he's been.

So, I've been thinking about what to do – to be honest, the car's never been that reliable. I don't think it'll be too much to fix it, but maybe it's time to get rid of it – see what a garage will offer me for it. Anyway, I'll see you shortly. **

M * Where've you been? The market?

F Yeah, I saw a shirt there that would suit my brother. I might actually get it for him – it'd really suit him, and it's his birthday next week. Anyway, while I was there, I couldn't resist getting a lovely necklace. I never normally give in to temptation, but ...

M Well, you probably deserve it! So is the market a good place to go shopping?

F It depends – but you do have to look carefully – I've occasionally bought kitchen equipment that's broken pretty quickly. There's usually plenty of stuff on the stalls though, and I've even come across one or two things I've been really impressed by.

M That's good to know. **

Now look at Questions 15 and 16.

PAUSE 00'15"

M: male, mid twenties, UK accent

M * I had to read lots of novels at high school, in literature class. I guess it was good as although the books were by well-known authors, I probably wouldn't have even picked them up otherwise - and actually, they weren't bad stories! But, having to write essays about them spoilt the pleasure of reading for me, and I didn't attempt another novel until I left university.

Now, though, my attitude towards novels is different. I'd probably still hesitate to advise others to read the books I've enjoyed – I have very particular tastes – but I've discovered the joy of adding my favourite ones to my bookshelves. I tend to avoid the latest best-sellers though – I rarely finish them! **

M * Where are you going on holiday this year?

F Haven't decided yet – we'll probably return to our favourite place – reasonably close to home, luckily.

M Really? I prefer having a look around somewhere different.

F Well, I enjoy that too, but even in familiar places, there's always something you haven't seen before. Anyway, I need to relax a bit too!

M There's no point in having a holiday otherwise!

F Didn't you have a really fantastic holiday last year?

M Absolutely! I took my mate with me, to a place I'd been dying to go to since I can't remember when. We both loved it! Then I happened to see it on a programme about holidays – so I guess everyone will want to go there now! **

R1 Exercise 3

You will hear a woman called Marta Harris giving a talk about small creatures called bats. For each question, choose the correct answer, A, B or C and put a tick in the appropriate box.

You will hear the talk twice. Now look at questions 19–26.

PAUSE 00'40"

F: female, thirties, light US accent

F: * Hi everyone! I'm Marta Harris, I'm a teacher and in my spare time, I work with bats. It's fascinating!

So – how did I first become interested in bats? Well, just after graduation, I had a short break at the home of a friend from university. She's passionate about the environment, and after a late dinner, took me to see loads of bats outside a nearby office, flying around – amazing! And that's when it all started!

I wanted to learn more about bats, especially once I realised how little is known about how bats live. So to make a contribution, I started doing some research. I've since learned ways of studying them, which includes monitoring their behaviour. This has allowed me to see how cute – and fragile – they are up close. And I now know some bats are in decline, so we really do have to assist them.

Many people probably aren't aware of how bats help our environment. For example, some bat species are good at spreading seeds after they've eaten fruit, which helps plants grow elsewhere. And others collect pollen from flowers, just as bees do. Their key role, though, is eating insects that might otherwise destroy crops, so we should value them for that.

So what do I particularly like about bats? Well, one special thing is watching bats on a summer evening, displaying their incredible flying, and never crashing into anything! But I've also read that you're actually never far from a bat even if you're in a busy city full of people. That's what I admire above all about them.

Some countries have far more native bat species than the country where I live does. So far, I've recorded seeing about ten, although there are actually 18 living here altogether, slightly fewer than the 25 species I'd thought there were when I first started.

People often ask about the best places to see bats. Well, that depends – I've been on boat rides along a river, specially for bat-watching. They're very successful, as is visiting a forest. But the highest number I've seen was by a cricket field. It was wonderful!

And have you ever heard a bat call? It's quite an experience – though you'll definitely need lots of special equipment for it. What I discovered was that the calls are very high-pitched, so it's difficult for the human ear to make them out, however noisy they are to other bats. So you don't often hear them – but when you do, the range of different calls is amazing. I really didn't expect that.

I'm always keen to teach people about bats, so I give talks and show films about them to local residents, or encourage them to join various bat tours, which fascinate people. And I've recently persuaded bat experts to set up displays in different towns, which have been popular with lots of visitors – that's fantastic! **

You will hear six people talking about long-distance train travel.

For questions 27–32, choose from the list (A–H) which idea each speaker expresses. Write the correct letter (A–H) on the answer line. Use each letter only once. There are two extra letters which you do not need to use.

You will hear the recordings twice. Now read statements A–H.

PAUSE 00'30"

R1 Speaker 1

F: female, mid twenties; UK accent

* I used to take loads of luggage with me onto trains, but so many other people have begun doing the same, there's no room anymore! But I'll still choose to travel that way. What I find interesting is the variety of passengers you might come across. I love imagining who they are and what their lives are like, based on their appearance and what they're talking about. If no-one's around, I just stare through the window to pass the time.

PAUSE 00'10"

R1 Speaker 2

M: male, late twenties; UK accent

I travel long distances by train, taking loads of office work with me, as it's often quiet on board. Then I'll end up ignoring it entirely and gazing through the window, especially if I'm tired, even if the views aren't great. Very often I'll find myself chatting with another passenger – it's incredible what people tell you. That makes the journey pass quickly. I try and sit somewhere near the luggage area, if possible, otherwise there's often nowhere to put my bags.

PAUSE 00'10"

R1 Speaker 3

F: female, mid thirties; UK accent

I guess one thing about travelling by train is that, in theory, I can get some work done, although that doesn't often happen! But nowadays, I just don't feel I can get on polluting planes or into cars if there's the alternative of going by rail, despite the expense – it just feels like the better option, somehow. And friends are always telling me about their fascinating chats with fellow passengers – that hasn't happened to me yet, though!

PAUSE 00'10"

R1 Speaker 4

M: male, mid thirties, UK accent

I'd always said long-distance train travel made little sense financially, although I've recently revised my opinion – by booking in advance, I've had great special offers! I guess I've travelled by train so many times, though, the sense of adventure has slightly worn off. I tend to just sit quietly, doing nothing in particular – preferably away from people, so I don't need to talk. I don't even bother trying to read – which is something I used to love doing.

PAUSE 00'10"

R1 Speaker 5

F: female, mid twenties, UK accent

If I've got time, I'll travel by train rather than fly, no matter how far I'm going. I know flying's faster and offers greener options nowadays. But the attraction of train travel for me is that thrilling feeling I get as I board the train and it leaves the station, as I know it'll be stopping at so many cities on the way. Even if you plan in advance, you can still spend a lot – but it's worth it, I'd say.

PAUSE 00'10"

R1 Speaker 6

M: male, late thirties, light Australian accent

I do such a lot of travelling for work now, the days are gone when I'd find it enjoyable – which is a huge pity. And I've spent so much time sitting in narrow plane seats, trying to concentrate – and failing! So although train seats are only a slight improvement, with a tiny bit more room for my long legs, I can at least get on with stuff. That makes me feel I'm not wasting the hours I spend travelling, at least. **

R1 Exercise 5

You will hear an interview with a student called Jamie Walsh, whose hobby is exploring his city on foot. For each question, choose the correct answer, A, B or C, and put a tick in the appropriate box.

You will hear the interview twice. Now look at questions 33–40.

PAUSE 00'45"

F: female, thirties, mild Australian accent

M: male, late twenties, mild Australian accent

F * I'm with Jamie Walsh, whose current hobby is exploring his city on foot! Jamie, how did it start?

M Well, I'd read about people walking every street of their city, and uploading the results onto a special website. It sounded interesting. The thing is, I'm really a fan of peace and quiet, so I'd been travelling into the countryside for years to go walking, rather than staying in my city, but those places were getting increasingly well-known and more and more crowded. So that was the motivation. I was also becoming aware I didn't know much of my city so thought I'd try walking around it. And once I'd started, I formed a completely different idea of what it was like.

F How did you feel about your walks initially?

M Well, I was determined not to push myself to achieve goals – that really wasn't the idea! And luckily it wasn't like that, although I did often walk a bit faster than I'd originally intended! Anyway, afterwards I was pleased with how much I remembered of what I'd seen.

F And you're studying at university, so how do you find time for your walks?

M It takes some organising! I've been thinking about going to the edge of the city on my days off to walk, but I've always got too many other things to do. What works much better is getting off the bus at a different place each day, after finishing lectures. I've also considered going grocery shopping in different places, and then walking, but have realised I'd have to carry everything I buy!

F So what's helpful on your walks? Planning your route?

M Yes, I do this before I leave – it's quite useful to see places where I can sit down for a while! And I like mixing it up a bit along the route – seeing busy shopping streets, along with quieter places with trees, or open water. Anyway, before setting off, it's essential for me to look at a map I can open out in front of me. It helps me work out where places are in relation to each other.

F And are you content to stay within your own city?

M Absolutely – I thought I'd invite my mates to come too, but I've since found I prefer being alone. At least I know that if I get fed up, I can just head for my house – though that doesn't tend to happen. One thing though, was that I intended to go and see places where some of my relatives lived many years ago, but those no longer exist.

F Right...anyway, do you meet people while you're walking?

M Yes – and so many are keen to chat, which I hadn't expected. I think they're puzzled, though, when I tell them what I'm doing, probably because many have lived here all their lives, but haven't explored far – for many reasons. So of course they can't tell me about anything outside their area.

F And you've been reading about the city, too. What have you enjoyed most about that?

M Well, I discovered some big names from music and film came from the city, so that's been interesting. What's happened there over the centuries, though, is what I've probably got most pleasure from learning about. And that led me to finding out about typical styles of buildings there, although I mostly take photos of those along the route.

F So which discoveries have been beneficial to you on your walks?

M I'd never realised how many galleries there were, outside the centre! I've introduced my arty friends to those. I've also visited parks I'd never been to – I knew their names, but that was all. The biggest find, though, in spots you'd never imagine, is all the cafés – serving delicious stuff, so I go to them even when I'm not out walking! **
