Accessibility in the Old City of Jerusalem

The Old City of Jerusalem is visited by 10 million visitors each year. The area is hilly and surrounded by ancient city walls.

The government of the country has passed a law requiring visitor attractions and other tourism organisations to be accessible to all visitors and locals. This includes access for people who are wheelchair users, hearing impaired and visually impaired.

The Old City of Jerusalem is a protected World Heritage Site. All infrastructure developments and improvements must be completed in a way that does not damage the historical and cultural features of the ancient city.

Recent accessibility developments in the Old City of Jerusalem include:

- handrails
- ramps
- smooth raised walkways
- audio apps
- accessibility maps showing the best routes for wheelchair users
- accessibility apps translated into eight languages.

These developments have all been created to make the area more accessible and allow more tourists to experience the historical and cultural features of the city.
