Hawaiian Airlines has announced the next stage in its aircraft expansion plan. They will purchase five new Airbus A330 aircraft for delivery by 2015.

All of Hawaiian Airlines' new A330s will carry a total of 294 passengers in economy and business classes. This is 30 more passengers per aircraft than its current fleet of 16 Boeing 767 aircraft. The new A330s are more fuel-efficient than the Boeing 767s and have a longer operating range. This allows Hawaiian Airlines to open new non-stop routes between Hawaii and destinations in all of North America and eastern Asia.

Hawaiian Airlines has used its fleet of new A330s to meet increased consumer demand for its services to Honolulu from Las Vegas, Los Angeles, San Francisco and from Tokyo. The airline will also use A330 aircraft for its daily non-stop New York City to Honolulu service and on new routes to Brisbane in Australia and Auckland in New Zealand.
