General Marking Guidance

- All candidates must receive the same treatment. Examiners must mark the first candidate in exactly the same way as they mark the last.
- Mark schemes should be applied positively. Candidates must be rewarded for what they have shown they can do rather than penalised for omissions.
- Examiners should mark according to the mark scheme not according to their perception of where the grade boundaries may lie.
- There is no ceiling on achievement. All marks on the mark scheme should be used appropriately.
- All the marks on the mark scheme are designed to be awarded. Examiners should always award full marks if deserved, i.e. if the answer matches the mark scheme. Examiners should also be prepared to award zero marks if the candidate's response is not worthy of credit according to the mark scheme.
- Where some judgement is required, mark schemes will provide the principles by which marks will be awarded and exemplification may be limited.
- When examiners are in doubt regarding the application of the mark scheme to a candidate's response, the team leader must be consulted.
- Crossed out work should be marked UNLESS the candidate has replaced it with an alternative response.

To build its brand it is important that Oppo makes its ice cream different to stand out in the market • There is also an increase in demand for organic and naturally sweet desserts due to changing social trends. Oppo uses ingredients such as coconut oil and stevia leaf which may help create a USP and attract new customers • However, there are many other factors that will contribute to the success of Oppo • Oppo is competing with well established brands and are unlikely to have the marketing budget and distribution channels of the major brands. These factors are necessary to ensure Oppo succeeds and is able to compete in the market • It is also important that the ice cream tastes good to encourage repeat purchase and brand loyalty. Oppo must ensure it meets the needs of consumers by offering innovative flavours to appeal to new segments such as the over 50's

Training can be on-the-job or off-the-job • Sony began to offer competitive salaries of up to ¥7.3m for those with AI skills. This financial incentive may attract the best candidates to the industry • Sony is also recruiting workers who have attended favoured universities such as Carnegie Mellon University. This may bring new ideas and techniques into Sony • Line Corporation is recruiting 37% of its workers from outside of Japan who may bring expertise into the country. This may be significant to the development of AI in Japan, particularly because there seems to be a lack of AI teachers in the country • Daikin plan to train over 1,000 of its current employees who have no current knowledge of AI. This may inspire its employees to work hard if given the opportunity to learn new skills, particularly as Daikin is offering financial rewards to retain these staff • Graduates hired by Daikin are trained externally at Osaka University. This off-the-job training should ensure its staff are trained to a high level and given the expertise to develop AI • On-the-job training used at Daikin will help the workers develop their skills by watching and learning from other experienced staff • However, businesses such as Sony and Toshiba that are paying higher wages will have increased costs and potentially lower profit margins. This may reduce the ability to invest into new AI projects • Although Japan plan to recruit and train 250,000 people in AI skills annually, this plan was criticised as being unrealistic due to a shortage of AI teachers. Unless they can recruit more teachers then the plan may be flawed • Whilst Daikin is externally training its new graduates, they are at university for one year which may cause a time lag in benefitting from its training programme. This may put it further behind technology advancements in China and the US • Also, the success of on-the-job training at Daikin depends on the skills of existing staff and their expertise in AI • Overall Japanese businesses are using a variety of recruitment and training methods to increase the level of AI expertise in the country to compete with other countries. However, its success may depend on the time taken to select and recruit the staff
