Sources for use with Section A.

Source 1: From Vladimir Bukovsky, To Build a Castle, published 1978. Bukovsky was a leading member of the dissident movement from the late 1950s until he was expelled from the Soviet Union in 1976. Here he is commenting on the 'thaw' under Khrushchev.

The atmosphere of these years was one of springtime, hope and expectation. There was the World Youth Festival in Moscow in 1957, then the American exhibition in 1958. The importance of these events was comparable to Khrushchev's revelation of Stalin's terror system. There were foreign tourists, and a small quantity of rare, but nonetheless attainable, goods imported from the West. 5

Moscow was transformed before our very eyes. In place of the crime-ridden slum city of my childhood, there arose a city whose inhabitants filled the bookshops and theatres and crowded into halls where poets gave public readings. Throughout Moscow, office typewriters worked overtime. Typists clicked out the works of writers like Pasternak for their own personal pleasure or for their friends. It felt as if everyone was cautiously straightening numbed limbs after ages of sitting still. 10

Early in the 1960s all this came to an end. The golden age had lasted only three or four years. 15

Source 2: From an article written by Nikolai Bukharin, July 1920. Bukharin was a leading member of the Bolshevik Party. Here he is commenting on the role of women in Soviet Russia.

It is especially interesting to observe the change which has taken place among the women of the ordinary proletarians and peasants. Women previously treated like cattle have at last realised that they are human beings, entitled to equal rights. They take part in the general struggle against capitalism, against exploitation and slavery in any form. These women have begun to participate in the administration of farming. They sit in the Soviets and Executive Committees of various types and hold responsible positions. They are frequently seen at the battlefield, fighting or nursing the injured. 20

The working women of the middle-class and the peasant women are especially active in all situations that deal with the social care of women, mothers, children, elderly people and the sick. They are to be found working in institutions for pregnant women, women who have just given birth, in kitchens, public dining rooms, tea houses, in hospitals, recreation centres, in homes for the sick and elderly. They can be found helping in propaganda centres for the spreading of communist ideas. 25 30

Women who hardly ever heard about communism before the revolution do important work in order to achieve communism. Women are given tasks and duties and experience. This transforms them into revolutionary fighters and co-workers of the Communist Society.
