2. Translate the following passage into Swahili.

For the past ten years or so I have had a recurring dream. In this dream I am usually with other people and I am always remarking to them how fantastic a certain mountain looks. The sun's rays give it a most wonderful brightness. Even though I am not sure what continent or country it is in, my last dream showed a European landscape. But then it was shocking to see plants usually found in warmer climates, like cotton, pineapple, tea, coffee and sisal, blossoming here too! Let me describe the rest of the scenery:

The summit of this mountain is multi-peaked with snow all around, and the sun never sets. The place feels as though it is near the equator (due to the intense heat of around 33°C). I often wonder if it has ever been used for skiing. The rest of the environment is green and sloping but the mountain itself is tall and covered in grey and white. On the eastern side it has a beautiful misty forest with a calm river in the middle, without any currents or waves. Sometimes I see young children wandering around it, happily muttering to each other while playing. On the north-western side there are glaciers. But I have never seen any animals, except once when I saw a boat carrying an ill horse moving steadily downstream. This is probably the only sad thing that ever occurred in my wonderful sweet dream.
